Integrated Media

Informing communities, whether through journalism or public relations, serves democracy and the public good, and raises awareness of social injustices. Accurate, fair, and complete information is platform-neutral – available on the web and via social media, as well as in print and broadcast. The media world, with unlimited access to information, has never been richer.

THE PROGRAM
Gonzaga’s Integrated Media Department weaves the related disciplines of Journalism, Broadcast Studies, and Public Relations into an environment where students can learn and hone their writing, interviewing, strategic communications, and technological skills. These specialized communication skills become bridges for students into careers or further scholarship in graduate school.

The Integrated Media Department offers majors and minors in Broadcast Studies, Journalism, and Public Relations, as well as a new Visual Literacy minor, within the College of Arts and Sciences.

The Integrated Media programs strive to guide students toward academic excellence and tangible career goals. The curricula reflect the Catholic, Jesuit character and liberal arts traditions of Gonzaga.

Students have many opportunities to develop storytelling and strategic communication techniques as they experiment with multiple platforms and methods and learn through the lens of social justice and Ignatian pedagogy.

The coursework in Integrated Media programs teaches the skills and uses of technology and theory required of media professionals. Yet it balances this skill-based instruction with a philosophical grounding in ethical and effective communication that is productive in fostering communities and civic life.

In addition to coursework in traditional classroom settings, students regularly engage in hands-on media production experiences. The Integrated Media Department computer lab and TV studio are equipped for students to practice working in a contemporary news and video-editing environment. Students further hone skillful and responsible communication through internships in professional environments. They may earn academic credit for these internship experiences.

Campus media outlets include GUTV and KAGU, Gonzaga’s television and radio stations, and The Gonzaga Bulletin (gonzagabulletin.com), the student newspaper. Each offers opportunities for students to sharpen media skills learned in the classroom. Additionally, work created for these outlets helps build a substantial portfolio for applications to graduate schools and for internships and employment opportunities.

Our graduates are competitive applicants for service programs such as the Jesuit Volunteer Corps, Teach for America, and the Peace Corps. Others have gone on to law school or to business, education, and nonprofit settings.

Students in the Integrated Media Department are eligible to apply for membership in Iota Rho, the Gonzaga University chapter of the National Communication Honor Society, Lambda Pi Eta. Iota Rho is one of more than 240 active Lambda Pi Eta chapters at colleges and universities worldwide.

Many Integrated Media students complete at least one internship as a part of their coursework. Internships are available at local and regional media organizations including TV stations, daily and weekly newspapers, magazines, and the National Public Radio affiliate. As part of the PR internship course, students intern at professional organizations, nonprofits such as Catholic Charities, the Salvation Army, Shriners Hospital, and Vanessa Behan Crisis Nursery. Journalism students are eligible for a Dow Jones Fund Internship, which places interns in paid newsroom positions at major newspapers for the summer.

BROADCAST STUDIES
The Broadcast Studies program provides students with the worldview and skills necessary for creative and responsible work in the television and radio industries. Broadcasting majors are taught to emphasize work that makes a positive difference in their communities and the broader world.

To master their technical skills, students create a series of shows that are streamed live. GUTV also posts its broadcasts on its YouTube channel. Students engage in all aspects of the creation and production of these shows, including on-air roles, camera work, directing, mixing the audio, and non-linear editing.

Internships in broadcasting-centric workplaces allow students to burnish knowledge and experience acquired in classes in the professional world. Each semester, Spokane’s television and radio news organizations, such as the network affiliates and regional film production companies, invite our students to work alongside professionals in a range of appropriate roles. Academic credit toward major course requirements is available for internships, which faculty must approve.
The Journalism program cultivates students’ interests and techniques in gathering information through research and interviews, and writing for the variety of media platforms. The program emphasizes the role and responsibilities of journalism within the context of civic and political participation. It supports the Gonzaga Mission Statement’s commitment to social justice and seeks to develop among its students an awareness of injustice. Courses in media law, history, ethics and global journalism theory form the philosophical foundation for the major and minor.

Journalism students focus on issues of civic and cultural importance with a traditional news stance in their work, but there are ample opportunities for experimenting with styles of journalism that are appropriate for magazines, publications with a literary bent, and emerging digital platforms. Students also improve their visual storytelling skills in photojournalism and multimedia design courses. Most Gonzaga journalism students work for the weekly student newspaper, The Gonzaga Bulletin (gonzagabulletin.com).

For the senior capstone project, students demonstrate proficiency in the journalistic foundations of reporting, writing, and design on multiple media platforms. In addition, students are expected to demonstrate an understanding of the philosophical core of journalism’s historical role in the development of civic conversation and in the array of political systems around the globe.

Many Journalism students garner journalistic experience in the professional environment through internships, for which they may also earn academic credit. Students intern during summers in their hometowns at a local paper or magazine, or during the school year at media companies in Spokane like the city’s daily newspaper, The Spokesman-Review, or the weekly Pacific Northwest Inlander. Some students also work at the Associated Press Data Center located in Spokane, gathering high school and college sports scores, and on election night, voting results from across the country.

Gonzaga’s student journalists have also been awarded prestigious internships with the Washington Post, San Francisco Chronicle, the Denver Post, and the San Jose Mercury News, as well as the Washington D.C.-based National Geographic Magazine.

Journalism graduates pursue careers in a range of fields, from traditional news organizations to communications specialists in the political arena. Some continue in academia, seeking graduate degrees in M.F.A. writing programs or law degrees.

PUBLIC RELATIONS

The Public Relations Program combines the study of communication theory, corporate strategies and structures, general business concepts, and experiential planning and research techniques to best prepare students for work in the profession. Gonzaga’s program emphasizes the evolving role of public relations in the upper levels of organizations and in building strong relationships. The program also addresses new developments in the profession such as the use of multiple digital platforms and social media, and the growth of brand management. Courses in public relations writing, speech writing, media law, strategic communications, and campaign planning form the professional foundation for the major.

Public Relations students gain an advanced level of public speaking acumen that includes practice in speech writing and delivery for a variety of public relations-specific contexts as well as experience in media coaching and speech writing for corporate executives and spokespersons.

All Public Relations majors obtain public relations experience in the professional environment through a required internship with local, national, and international non-profit and for-profit organizations such as the American Cancer Society, Catholic Charities, General Electric, Nordstrom, Red Cross, Special Olympics, and YMCA. Internship experiences have included corporate media kit development, crisis communication plan development, social media and website management and development, corporate communication, speech writing, event planning and execution, and campaign planning.

Public Relations graduates pursue careers in a variety of sectors. Graduates have chosen to work in top public relations agencies such as Edelman, WE Communications, and Weber Shandwick as well as in corporations such as American Red Cross, Glass Door, and Microsoft. Some have served as Peace Corps volunteers while others continue in academia, seeking graduate degrees in a specialized communication field such as politics or health care.

The department supports an active chapter of the Public Relations Student Society of America (PRSSA). PRSSA membership offers ample opportunities for students to network with regional PR professionals in meetings on campus as well as through the regional professional group, Public Relations Society of America (PRSA).

THE PEOPLE

Susan English | Dept. Chair
M.A., Gonzaga University
news writing, media ethics, literary journalism, journalism history english@gonzaga.edu

Erin Dorsey
M.S., Eastern Washington University public relations, social media, leadership dorsey@gonzaga.edu

J. Mike Fitzsimmons
J.D., Gonzaga University media law, writing for broadcast, audio/video script writing fitzsimmons@gonzaga.edu

John Kafentzis
M.A., Gonzaga University
news reporting and writing, editing, design, public relations writing kafentzis@gonzaga.edu

Fr. Robert Lyons, S.J.
M.A., San Francisco State University broadcast and audio production, image communication lyons@gonzaga.edu

Matt McCormick
M.F.A., University of Buffalo, SUNY
photo journalism, photo art, documentary filmmaking, visual literacy mccormickm2@gonzaga.edu

Colleen McMahon
M.A., Washington State University public relations, media planning and execution, campaign planning mcmahon@gonzaga.edu

Tracy Simmons
M.A., Eastern New Mexico University entrepreneurial media, journalistic writing simmonst@gonzaga.edu