History

“What is history? An echo of the past in the future; a reflex from the future on the past.” – Victor Hugo

The study of History, arguably the most comprehensive of the liberal arts, broadens students’ perceptions and their understanding of the contemporary world through a critical study of the past. The study of History not only helps students develop an informed awareness of the human experience in all its diversity, it teaches the leaders of tomorrow how to communicate thoughtfully and clearly, and prepares them for high-quality employment in an unlimited number of fields.

THE PROGRAM

The History program helps students to develop the practical research and communication skills that will provide a foundation for graduate work, for the study of law, teaching, for careers in archival and library science, as well as for many careers in business and other professions.

Historians encourage an active approach to the study of this discipline. Department members teach both entry-level and upper-division courses. Teaching is the department’s primary concern, but they also know that to teach something well one must also do research in the field. Therefore, the department encourages faculty publication, attendance at professional conferences, and association with civic agencies. Field trips – some sponsored by Phi Alpha Theta, the National Society in History – are another means by which the faculty promote history as a field of study.

THE MAJOR

Gonzaga University’s Department of History offers a 33-credit major that allows students to complete coursework in the following topics:

- African History
- Asian History
- Greek and Roman History
- Latin American History
- Modern European History
- U.S. History

Examples of courses include:

- World Civilization 1500-Present
- Survey of Western Civilization
- The Ancient City
- History of Northern Ireland
- Hitler’s Germany
- History of Race in America
- U.S. Since 1945
- African Environmental History
- Historical Methods
- African American History
THE MINOR

Students majoring in other programs who have an interest in history may choose to complete a History minor. The general History minor consists of 18 credits (six courses) and has two required courses: Survey of Western Civilization I and either Survey of Western Civilization II or World Civilization 1500-Present. Students may then complete the History minor with four History elective courses.

Students may also pursue minors in Latin American History, Asian History, or History of Race and Ethnic Communities.

DISTINCT OPPORTUNITIES

Many History students choose to study abroad for a semester or an academic year. Gonzaga offers History courses at its Florence campus during the Fall, Spring, and Summer terms. Students have also enjoyed opportunities to take courses with GU History professors in Turkey and Rome.

The History program provides opportunities for internships for variable credit. An internship at a local non-profit, library, or archive provides an invaluable learning experience, an opportunity to explore a potential career field, a chance to learn and teach history beyond the classroom, and a vehicle for gaining hands-on professional skills.

Some students majoring and minoring in History choose to obtain teacher certification that will allow them to pursue careers as secondary school history teachers. Faculty advisors in the History Department and School of Education assist these students in planning their programs to meet certification requirements.

OUTCOMES

A liberal arts education develops a student's ability to write effectively, speak eloquently, and think critically. A liberal arts education further provides students with a broad background in citizenship and culture. Graduates of Gonzaga’s History program typically find employment in fields that value these attributes. These include business, education, law, government, journalism, and publishing.

A sample of employers for recent Gonzaga History graduates includes:

- A variety of school districts and colleges
- Fort Nisqually Living History Museum
- Google Launch Pad
- NextGen Climate

Gonzaga’s History program also prepares students for graduate study in history and in archival and library science, as well as for careers in museum work and public history.
